Clearly if a person is working against the group in a fan site then they aren't a fan.

Quite different than a news aggregator or forum that pretends to be non-biased where speech is shutdown. Very different than a fan site like this.

I'm proud of everyone that was able to go but at the same time, people waving flags and acting like saints aren't going to change anything. No matter the size of the rally of nice peaceful people, it's easy to ignore. They aren't scared of nice people behaving like saints.

Tucker is a cuck but he got one thing right, "Violence works."

It will come down to who they are more scared of: Antifa/BLM who burn their cities and try to break down their doors with weapons out, or a bunch of peaceful, saintly acting Trump voters who go act nicely not to turn the country into a globalist hellscape.

Guess who they'll be afraid of.

Maybe if our gov would subsidize the domestic cotton like they do with the cotton we're exporting, then he would (preferably not subsidize at all). Until then, the Big Cotton industry treats us citizens a lot like our Big Healthcare industry (ie plug all the farming expenses towards the American consumer while giving the rest of the world a subsidized discount)

15 I'm sure it's difficult to keep content rolling hour after hour that's really off-script. Even big networks struggle with this. They have to find "articulate" people willing to speak who aren't nut jobs or want to act like idiots on a national broadcast forum. In between they have to fill that time.

▼ permalink parent save report block reply

▲ UK_Pede 1 months ago +2 / -0

2 It is an art form. Doing random piece to camera segments for hours is very difficult unless you just repeat the same crap over and over. Few people are any good at it. I used to have to do it a lot in an old job. Sometimes it just rolls from you, and other times you get a bit stuck haha

1 we love you too. I've met some pretty based Canadians that were honorable and terrific people. I used to fish in Chapleau, northern Ontario, and it will always be one of my all-time favorite places on this entire planet. I've traveled all over the world while I served in the military, and Canada has some of the most drop-dead gorgeous landscapes. Absolutely stunning and beautiful. If you ever visit us, I highly recommend checking out our national parks. Yellowstone is incredible.

I understand you though. Being from Michigan, I'm embarrassed of Detroit and Lansing. I wish they would build a wall around both of these shitholes to spare our eyes from the visual herpes. I lock my doors while through them on the highway. I'm also not a big fan of the place called "California".

Anyways, you're an amazing person and I hope we can always be frens.

4 I've been at Freedom Plaza all day. Standing by the homeless guy with the blanket right now to be out of the rain. The plaza itself has never been more than 1/2 full. I see crowds of 250k every year back home. There are not 50k here. Not even close. Wish there were. Streets clear around the plaza and the plaza is small. It's never been full. I think a lot came to peek and left. As for the rest of DC, neither you, nor I can estimate how many are randomly walking around.

I think others are right. We'll all be out at once tomorrow.

2 We just got back from the Lincoln monument and are headed down the mall towards the capitol. Just passed the air and space museum. I'm 6'5" white cowboy hat, my wife is with me, she has a cream colored stetson on.

I've seen at least 50K here of us throughout the day - easy. Thousands alone in freedom park today.

Homeless guy in DC? That can be on any street.

My fingers are cold as my gloves suck. So off to get something to eat and then escort my wife back to friends in NoVA.

4 If you were in Freedom Plaza you'd know there's a single homeless guy wrapped in a white blanket at the National Theater that has been in the same spot all day long. All day. Has never left. No others squatting in the plaza...none. Sounds like you were like many and just peeked in.

I'm in black block with tactical gloves and Kevlar sleeves.

Looking forward to tomorrow...peace mano.

"advance the line" doesn't mean standing outside waving flags, listening to speakers and shouting "Stop the steal". It means actually marching as one and bowling over anyone who gets in the way. if police try to "crowd control" you swarm them with as many people as possible and take their toys away.

A handful of these folks are giving us a bad look. I know they mean well, but someone with some leadership skills should really keep some of these people on the crowd and not at the podium. We can agree all day about the overreacting on Covid that takes place, but don't need a spokesperson for the Trump protests and rallies telling everyone to "hug it out" and hug the next person over, or yelling that "this is a super spreader". God gave them brains.. they need to use them.

The entire country is at stake here and we don't have wiggle room for these morons. I appreciate their effort, but really wish they'd use their fucking brains. Stick with Stop the Steal and it's perfectly fine to mention God or Jesus or whatever you want, because we have religious freedoms in the USA. I fully support that. But don't come off looking like some lunatic zealot. Between that and people LARPing around in cosplay at this even, how can we expect anyone to take us seriously?

I'm mad as hell right now because I'm full on BIG DICK ENERGY for GEOTUS, and i'm getting that clairvoyant notion that these clowns are just ruining it for him/us.

I couldn't agree more. Trump supporters did not travel to DC to listen to generic televangelism set to depressing elevator music. They are making it about their church, when this isn't a religious movement. This guy was going on forever about how he was a meth head and saved by Jesus, as if people traveled half-way across the country to listen to how he was saved by the church. I could watch this same speech on any weekday on the 700 club.

Trump has vastly expanded the right-wing base and these tone-deaf proselytizers are trying to shrink it back down to the same divisive issues that has been used to divide the country for the last 40+ years. We are in DC to unite against tyranny, not remind everyone how terrible abortion is and how Jesus saves. "If you are not picketing in front of abortion clinics than you are part of the problem." This lady can fuck off. Plenty of time to evangelize and debate wedge issues, this isn't that time.

We can not let proselytizers and opportunists hijack a broad movement against tyranny.

100%. They are hijacking a secular rally and making it all about them, their church, their sermon, and their issues. If you're going to promote your church to a captive audience during a secular rally, at least don't sound like a McTelevangelist. I can imagine at least half of that audience feels like their grandma turned on the 700 club and swallowed the remote.
